Glen Innes Celtic Festival

A short while ago my wife made arrangements for us to travel to Glenn Innes to enjoy the Celtic Festival. Our accommodation was at the historic mansion called Blair Athol just outside of Inverell, which was exceptionally good quality and highly recommended. Being 115 years old this two-story building had exquisite period decor and it was a pleasure to stay there.

The Saturday morning consisted of a 40 minute trip to Glenn Innes to view several Scottish pipe bands marching the length of the main street and hosting a concert in the middle of the main street at the conclusion of the parade. Cold and wet weather did not deter the crowd with everybody remaining for the concert. When the concert was completed the crowd adjourned to an area called the standing stones, which is a replica area of stone henge with massive stone monoliths erected about 20 years ago.

With the rain disappearing we had an entertaining day wondering around watching caber tossing, highland dancing, along with concerts in large marquees and lots of stalls to keep everyone occupied. The crowds were large and everybody appeared to enjoy themselves.

The day for us ended later in the afternoon when the dark clouds moved in again, so it was a short drive back to Inverell in time to enjoy a quiet ale and appetising meal in a small restaurant.

The next day we visited the National Transport Museum in Inverell which has an extensive collection of motor vehicles, dolls, sewing machines and old memorabilia. This is all contained in a massive shed which everyone would be happy to have. Really worth a visit.

This weekend away revealed a lot more to the northeast tablelands than I had realised and a lot more to see than 3 days would allow.

Regards Fosel
